BULLY: In theatres nationwide now!

Apr. 13, 2012 ? Jill

You've heard about BULLY ^[1], the movie that, through personal stories, sheds light on the emotional and physical toll of bullying. Tons of people - and we encourage you to join them - will see the movie when it opens nationwide this weekend.

But what comes next? What will you do after watching Kelby, a 16-year-old lesbian, face harassment from teachers and students alike? After watching Ja'Meya, a 14-year-old girl who suffers years of bullying, pull out a gun to scare off her tormenters - and then face life in prison?

GSA Network has partnered with BULLY to translate this powerful film into concrete action. Our BULLY campaign guide ^[2] helps you establish local policies to combat bullying without relying on harmful punitive discipline.

As BULLY devastatingly shows, school staff, policies, and culture are key to the spread - or interruption - of bullying. Simply singling out and punishing young "bullies" through harsh discipline or zero tolerance does not solve the problem. In fact, students like Ja'Meya - acting out after their own harassment is ignored and marginalized - often suffer most from punitive discipline policies, which disproportionately target students of color, low-income students, students with disabilities, and LGBT students.

We need to make it better, and that starts with local non-discrimination policies that foster a climate of safety and respect, not of fear and punishment, for ALL students.

Take your friends and family to see BULLY this weekend ^[3], and join the nationwide conversation on keeping our schools safe.
